

About the Author

Mother of one child and a mother to many, Asadah is no stranger to raising children. Asadah taught school for over fifteen years, provided youth development and parenting workshops for ten years and is currently an administrator of an afterschool program in Harlem, NY.

Being an educator, Asadah has had to learn to handle problems with wisdom and not violence. Her sincere care for the welfare and outcome of the lives of her students can be seen through her actions and heard from the comments of the people she serves.

Beat Black Kids is Asadah's first published book and her way of getting her viewpoint and solutions out to the entire world. While she has welcomed many thanks for creating this work, Asadah is also courageous and certain enough to handle the many challenges that come from those who feel beating Black kids as a normal practice.

Press Release

What an amazing job you have done with Beat Black Kids! The stories- excellent job with that! I have actually learned some new and very disturbing things from your stories. They are very powerful!

Amber Lisa,
Author, The Diamond Life Series

It's the little book creating tons of controversy! Beat Black Kids is a book about not having to beat Black children as a means of disciplining them. Beat Black Kids makes its readers look at themselves, the pain created over the years and asks, "What are we going to do about it?"

Beat Black Kids has already been featured five times on Blogtalk Radio, had a full interview on WLTH 1370 in Gary, IN and has been featured in the Amsterdam News in NY!

Filled with true stories from a variety of people, Beat Black Kids has parents look at the pain caused to them growing up and helps them make better decisions about what they are going to do with Black children in the future. Some of it will make you laugh. Other parts will make you think, but everyone comes away with better things to do and in the end, they create happier children.

Asadah is delightfully honest! Big gift in a little yellow package! The book is magical and I love page 86!
